報告タイトル: "Islamic Tourism Demand and the Development of Shariah Compliant Hotel" (イスラーム・ツーリズムへの需要とシャリーア適格ホテルの発展)

The economic concept for Islamic tourism focuses on the importance of intra-Muslim tourism for new markets and tourism destinations, and the religion itself is known as a stable factor that influences consumer buying behaviour, resulting in more demand on religious-related product and services. In reality, Islamic tourism is not to replace the existing tourist activity but to open up new opportunities for growth and to market a new type of commodity. In the hotel industry, there is a growing demand for Shariah-compliant hotels (SCH) to cater for largely untapped but lucrative niche of Islamic tourism market, although its development is slow. This paper aims to review the concepts of Islamic tourism typologies and the development of SCH, since the current literature in this field has been descriptive in nature due to lack of empirical data available related to it.
